

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. I am no longer bothered by sales calls from people I don't want to talk to in the first place. Before I was placed on Indiana's do not call list, my phone would ring off the hook. People would call me during my dinner, I would rush into the house from the outside to find out it was only a salesman for carpet cleaning. I have hard wood floors. My privacy is very important to me and to lessen the restrictions for Indiana would not make me a very happy citizen. Please reconsider or just leave Indiana's law alone. Thank you for your tmie.
